Professional Experience and Curriculum Vitae

From birth I was steeped in Baltimore's unique and eccentric sophistication. My huge southern family - North Carolina thankyouverymuch - instilled me with a sense of propriety and Baltimore did its best to subvert it. The balance between those worlds informs my art, my sense of humor, and my work ethic (which is really good, promise). Since 2009 I have called New York home, and I find the melting-pot culture very rewarding. So c'mon, call me. I'm really fun. Really.

Previous Clientele

NOBODY HOME

by ROLAND KELTS

What just happened happens a lot. A friend from New York DM'd me via Twitter while I was attending a concert in a park in Tokyo.

This is what she wrote:

Check this out (Link). Thoughts?

Four words, pure enticement.

What was it, and what should I reply? I couldn't resist, clicked on the link, found animals engaging in eccentric activities — and missed part of the concert I should have been enjoying in Tokyo.

I fingered my iPhone screen to shape a reply. It took me longer than expected.

How did I get here? Oh, wait. I know how I got here.

In my case, and at my age, the easy answer is the answering machine patented in the US by Kazuo Hashimoto in 1983.

"The machine makes everything a message," wrote Don DeLillo in his 1991 novel, Mao II, describing an author speaking to a friend's machine in an empty room. "[It] narrows the range of discourse and destroys the poetry of nobody home."

For me, it was the answering machine — before the personal
