Hello, this is my invoice. My name is Terry Words, the freelance copywriter you've hired for a few projects now. Hope you don't mind the layout. Chuffed with it myself. I know you guys are all about efficiency but I was hoping you wouldn't mind waiting for what you needed. Now, I think it was two months I waited for payment last time. I was aging on the spot like a slug. Long old time, that, two months. Especially given I had actually asked to be paid in one. It must have slipped your mind. Now I know what you're thinking: 'If you're going to make this hard work, Mr Words, then you're the one who is going to suffer', to which I would make the kind of a sound you'd hear had you just blown the big question on a game show (with your partner and parents putting on a brave face in the audience... grim). You see, I've sent this invoice special delivery, so I know you have it. So you, my friend, are 'served' as the Americans would say oh good lord where was I? Of course, the date. The date is February Seventeenth. The year is Two Thousand and Twenty. Your Company Name and address is The Advertising Agency, Advertising Street, London West One. I wrote the copy for soaps are us dot com and I did a quite excellent job for two hundred and fifty pounds (bargain). My payment terms (why are you laughing?) are thirty days. You absolutely must pay me in thirty days (why are you laughing?). How could you not pay me in thirty days (at least pretend you've got something stuck in your throat instead of laughing)? Let's have a think about that thirty-day time period for a moment. Have you got a moment? Of course you haven't, but what about all those unbillable minutes I've spent waiting for your sloth-like mechanisms to dither into the middle lane of the long and winding Freelance sighway? I don't know if you believe in a God but there's one that apparently created the Earth in six days. And then there's Craig David. Have you heard 'Seven Days'? Well if you haven't then you should give it a listen, because that boy got an awful lot done in a week. And if he had, at the time, made a lyrical tweak that read 'oh and by the way on Tuesday I also managed to pay a freelancer on time' then I would have totally believed him. Oh hold on, I've done it again. My bank is HSBC and my sort code is eighty eight dash seventy six dash zero one and my account number is one two three one one two three one. I'm sure I had my address around here somewhere but before you go flicking the wheel on your mouse to dive down the page, may I ask you how you'd feel if your hard-earned readies weren't sitting in your account when you thought they should be? You'd be fuming. I'd be fuming for you. You'd be frantically moving money about to fill the gaps. Direct debits would be stinging on the way out, being ripped from your being like the touch of a heavy-handed beautician giving you a quite violent wax. Your life would belly-flop into your overdraft without any pants on and all its bits on display. Blimey, I've lost myself yet again (you're going to have to stop me next time) my address is 1 Admiral Avenue, London N5. Ok, I think this is where we go our separate ways. How has this been for you? Has it been an utter palaver? Because that's how I feel every time I have to hit send on an email chasing you lot for money that is mine. Here I sit again, contemplating my payment terms as the walls close in in my echo chamber. My pint runneth dry, the inside of my empty cereal boxes look like dusty, dystopian wastelands and my soul has withered in the heat of negligence. I will come for your souls and I will shake your ivory towers with a revolutionary fist, because you will never, ever take my integrity, my will to fight for what is right and my ah fuck it who am I kidding please pay me on time yours faithfully, Terry.

Please kindly get in touch for portfolio works.
