Awards and Accolades

Background

Kevin was born in 1972 in metropolitan Detroit, Michigan. Raised by an artist and an architect, Kevin was introduced to art and creativity at an early age. In high school he developed an interest in ceramics. In the next few years he won several awards and was offered an art scholarship to college.

After college, art was put on hold for a year or two as Kevin found a real job in sales. The stress and pressure of sales, however, drove him back to art. In 1996 Kevin discovered photography, and has been working in the medium ever since. Kevin has worked in the traditional darkroom in both black and white, and color, as well as digitally. Currently his personal projects are done primarily with an old Hasselblad using color negative film, which is then scanned, and printed out using inkjet or LightJet style printers.

Kevin's current projects include 100 Abandoned Houses, focusing on abandoned houses in Detroit, Michigan, and Detroit's Small Churches, a series on the adaptive reuse of small structures as small churches. Other photographic topics include industrial Detroit, and Detroit night scenes. Much of Kevin's work has focused on his former hometown of Detroit. Kevin's interest in Detroit developed early as a basic curiosity of the economic and social hardships the city has faced for decades. In an attempt to understand the state of the city, Kevin has continued to photograph the area as its economic decline has accelerated.
